The BLACK BAG

The girl paused, lifting to Kirkwood's face her eyes, clear, fearless, truthful. "I never was given to understand that there was anybody who might have inherited other than myself," she declared.

"Last week I received a letter, signed with my father's name, begging me to appoint an interview with him in London. I did so—guess how gladly! I was alone in the world, and he my father, whom I had never thought to see. We met at his hotel, the Plaza. He wanted me to come and live with him; said that he was growing old and lonely and needed a daughter's love and care. He told me that he had made a fortune in America and was amply able to provide for us both. As for my inheritance, he persuaded me that it was by right the property of Frederick Hallam, Mrs. Hallam's son."

"I have met the young gentleman," interpolated Kirkwood. "His name was new to me, but my father assured me that he was the text of kin mentioned in Colonel Burroughs' will and convinced me that I had no real right to the property. After all, he was my father. I agreed. I could not bear the thought of wronging anybody. I was to give up everything but my mother's jewels. It seems—my father said—I don't—I can't believe it now."

She choked out a little, dry sob. It was some time before she seemed able to continue.

"I was told that my great-uncle's collection of jewels had been my mother's property. He had in life a passion for collecting jewels, and it had been his whim to carry them with him wherever he went. When he died in Froggall street they were in the safe by the head of his bed. I, in my grief, at first forgot them and then afterward carefully put off removing them. To come back to my father, night before last we were to call on Mrs. Hallam. It was to be our last night in England. We were to sail for the continent on the private yacht of a friend of my father's the next morning. This is what I was told and believed, you understand."

"That night Mrs. Hallam was dining at another table at Plaza, it seems. I did not then know her. When leaving she put a note on our table by my father's elbow. I was astonished beyond words. He seemed much agitated, told me that he was called away on urgent business, a matter of life and death, and begged me to go alone to Froggall street, get the jewels and meet him at Mrs. Hallam's later. I wasn't altogether a fool, for I began dimly to suspect then that something was wrong, but I was a fool, for I consented to do as he desired. You understand—now know?"

"I do, indeed," replied Kirkwood grimly. "I understand a lot of things now that I didn't five minutes ago. Please let me think."

But the time he took for deliberation was short. He had hoped to find a way to spare her by springing Calendar, but momentarily he was becoming more impressed with the futility of dealing with her save in terms of candor—merciful, though they might seem harsh.

"I must tell you," he said, "that you have been outrageously misled, swindled and deceived. I have heard from your father's own lips that Mrs. Hallam was to pay him £2,000 for keeping you out of England and losing you your inheritance. I'm inclined to question, furthermore, the assertion that these jewels were your mother's. Frederick Hallam was the man who followed you into the Froggall street house and attacked me on the stairs. Mrs. Hallam admits that he went there to get the jewels. But he didn't want anybody to know it."

"But that doesn't prove—"

"Just a minute," rapidly and concisely Kirkwood recounted the events wherein he had played a part subsequent to the adventure of Bermondsey Old Stairs. He was guilty of but one evasion. On one point only did he stir the truth. He conceived it his honorable duty to keep the girl in ignorance of his straitened circumstances. She was not to be distressed by knowledge of his distress, nor could he tolerate the suggestion of sympathy to play for her sympathy. It was necessary, then, to invent a motive to excuse his return to No. 9 Froggall street. I believe he chose to exaggerate the uniqueness of his nature and threw in for good measure a desire to recover a prized trinket of no particular moment, esteemed for its associations, and so forth. But, whatever the fabrication, it passed muster. To the girl his motives seemed less important than the discoveries that resulted from them.

leniently—had all round. "Moreover, in your father's pay, tries to have him arrested, the better to rob him. Mrs. Hallam, to secure your property for that precious pet, Freddie, conspires at if she doesn't instigate a kidnapping. Your father takes her money to deprive you of yours, which could profit him nothing so long as you remained in lawful possession of it, and at the same time he conspires to rob, through you, the rightful owners, if they are, why should Freddie Hallam go like a thief in the night to secure property that's his beyond dispute? I don't really think you owe your father any further consideration."

He waited patiently. Eventually "No-o!" the girl sobbed assent.

"It's this way, Calendar, counting on your sparing him in the end, is going to bound us. He's doing it now. There's Hobbs in the next car, for proof. Until these jewels are returned, whether to Froggall street or to young Hallam, we're both in danger, both thieves in the sight of the law. And your father knows that too. There's no profit to be had by discounting the temper of these people. They're as desperate a gang of swindlers as ever lived. They'll have those jewels if they have to go as far as murder."

"Mr. Kirkwood," she deprecated in horror.

He wagged his head stubbornly, ominously. "I've seen them in the raw. They're hot on our trail now. Ten to one they'll be on our backs before we can get across the channel. Once in England we will be comparatively safe. Until then—but I'm a brute—I'm frightening you."

"You are, dreadfully," she confessed to a tremulous voice.

"Forgive me. If you look at the dark side first, the other seems all the brighter. Please don't worry. We'll pull through with flying colors or my name's not Philip Kirkwood."

"I have every faith in you," she informed him, naively sincere. "When I think of all you've done and dared for me, on the mere suspicion that I needed your help."

"We'd best be getting ready," he interrupted hastily. "Here's Brussels."

It was so. Lights, in little clusters and long, wheeling lines, were leaping out of the darkness and flashing back as the train rumbled through the suburbs of the little Paris of the north. Already the other passengers were bestirring themselves, gathering together wraps and hand luggage and preparing for the journey's end.

Rising, Kirkwood took down their two satchels from the overhead rack and waited, in grim abstraction planing and counter planning against the machinations in whose wires they two had become so perilously entangled.

Primarily there was Hobbs to be dealt with—no easy task, for Kirkwood dared not resort to violence nor in any way invite the attention of the authorities, and threats would be an idle waste of breath in the case of that corrupt and malignant little cockney, himself as keen as any needle, adept in all the artful resources of the underworld whence he had sprung, and further primed for action by that master rogue, Calendar.

The train was pulling slowly into the station when he reluctantly abandoned his latest unfeasible scheme for shaking off the little Englishman and concluded that their salvation was only to be worked out through everlasting vigilance, incessant movement and the favor of the blind goddess Fortune.

He saw nothing of Hobbs as they alighted and hastened from the station and hardly had time to waste looking for him since their train had failed to make up the precious ten minutes. Consequently he dismissed the fellow from his thoughts until—with Brussels lingering in their memories a garish vision of brilliant streets and glowing cafes, glimpsed furtively from their cab windows during its wild dash over the broad mid-city boulevards—at midnight they settled themselves in a carriage of the Brugeois express. They were speeding along through the open country with a noisy clatter; then a minute's investigation sufficed to discover the mate of the Althea serenely ensconced in the coach behind.
